Act two scene two. Claudius has called on two of Hamlet's friends, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, to help spy on Hamlet to find the cause of his madness (L15-18). Claudius shows his ability to act with his handling of the Hamlet situation and we see more of this with the return of the ambassadors from Norway.

Macbeth Act 2 scene 2 analysis. In Act 2 Scene 2 we hear of the murder of Duncan, in Macbeth Duncan's murder happens off stage, perhaps to focus more significantly not on the act of death but the moral turmoil and consequences that are incurred, as supported through the critical interpretation that Macbeth is a 'tragic hero'.

February 25, 2015 at 2:53 am. Light and Dark Act 1: Light and Dark is used very commonly and repeatedly in the play, and it is kind of easy to find as finding things that relate to light meaning good and dark meaning evil. Since the beginning of the play a relation to dark and light can be found, "thunder and lighting.

An incident of dramatic irony occurs in Act 2, scene 2. Hamlet is greeted by Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, who were sent to spy on him. It is Hamlet who is displaying the irony because he is acting as if these "friends" are just being very kind and friendly with him for some unknown reason. Although...

Act 2, Scene 1, Props. In act 2 scene 1 of Macbeth, Macbeth imagines a dagger leading him to Duncan. He says, "Is this dagger which I see before me, The handle toward my hand? Come let me clutch thee!" (2.1.49-50). The dagger in the image has a sharp blade that would have made it even more tempting for Macbeth to grab and use to kill Duncan.
